

From the past fathers give birth like our mothers the ten pits in which we place ten pillars we have deemed the bill of rights

The first right of the people is the freedom of religion, assembly, press, and speech and in this is so vibrantly displayed it can be seen across every state, and from where I stand I see my peers and elders so eagerly share their own beliefs and ideas each wearing their sigils and garments to exclaim their religious standing and in its beauty, we can barely see the difference as although our eyes have regressed to forget to process such signs and scenes which leave us the old, young, and different to find our companions based on individuality

The second right is the right to bear arms and in this controversy is an anomaly in which the government approve of arms like a father allows his children to use bows and bb rifles but alas the decision was half hazardous as the children now run around some dangerous and some not so without thought it becomes a constant worry that leaves most in a hurry from those who are deranged enough to pull the trigger and take a shot

The third right to the people is the protection from the government to force its citizens to house soldiers, this pillar is but a transparent crystal and in my belief, I think like a man who has lived in his home for some odd years then goes blind, would still treat the couch he threw away a week ago as if it was still there as we would if this right were to disappear

The fourth right to the people is the protection of unreasonable search and seizures, alas this is like a ghost that phases in and out of our plane of existence for some it protects them but in truth, it is giving a shield to a man not involved in the battle while those it should protect believe the shield does not exist, from where they stand there was never a shield

The fifth right to the people is the protection from being accused of the same crime twice and the right to not incriminate themselves, this has become second nature to most, they believe that one may enter the legal battlefield with no restraint to protect themselves with whatever legal means possible

The sixth right to the people is the right to a timely trial and to be judged by their peers this has a strange side effect like a monkeys hands becoming feet when it stands upright in truth this has created a deep fascination in the legal system and the desire to fight for the innocent's freedom and to send to death the rule-breakers it romanticizes the legal process like a teenager on a study session with their romantic interest

The seventh right to the people is the right to a jury in a civil case as if to invite an audience to a live dispute between two beasts this has, for the most part, become a topic of gossip for those interested in crime or those that have an ill will or love for those involved

The eighth right given to the people is the protection from excessive bail or unusual and cruel punishments this in its truest form acts as a dam from humans cruel tendencies to punish those they deem immoral inhuman and this remains true to this day for every other case there will be those that demand the death penalty

The ninth right given to the people is an anomaly it is but less and more than infinity both brittle and unbreakable both not there and everywhere else it is the command that not all rights are stated that not all pillars are conceived or seen and in this we the people gain the ability to fight and make and change our right and stops those with malicious intent from trying to worm through loopholes like a fox in a rabbits snow burrow

The tenth right given to the people is the rights reserved to their home states and for better or worse this has overall been a positive effect creating healthy rivalry and identity where each state grows and diverges to make new cultures and as in any population in a given species diversity is key to success
