

The way the constitution affects our daily lives is in every way the things we do in our daily life from other countries are very different, for example, we have freedom. That's one simple way to explain it and everyone takes it for granted. To start the first amendment gives us the freedom of religion we can practice any religion in the united states. you can practice Christianity, Judaism, and Islam or you can even not practice any you can be unaffiliated in religion. Second, you can express yourself(within the law)some might not agree but you have the right including the right to assembly/ to protest. Now for the amendment some think is the most important the 2nd amendment the right to bear arms or the right to own and carry firearms so think its the most important because it is the amendment that lets us protect our other rights. Some say that our founding fathers gave us this right just in case the government tries to control its people and not let them express their other rights; some don't agree with that statement that affects our daily lives more at the moment because groups are trying to ban guns and some trying to stop that from happening but one thing we can't forget is there are two sides to each story so both parties have their reasons for what they are fighting for. And another amendment that affects our everyday life is the 4th amendment Fourth Amendment is The freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. This affects our everyday life because it stops police officers who get power-hungry as some call it and try to search you for your ethnicity or your appearance they can not without reason. Furthermore, there are also the three government houses that affect our daily lives. The three houses are legislative, executive, and judicial. They are all three very important. To start, the legislative branch makes all laws, declares war, regulates interstate and foreign commerce, and controls taxing and spending policies. So if they make laws I see that as very important because things change every day and newer generations might have different perspectives on things that might have been ok fifty or eight years ago so that lets us make new laws that everyone agrees with. Now for the judicial branch, the judicial branch decides the constitutionality of federal laws and resolves other disputes about federal laws which I see as important because the federal laws I see as important because means all the states get the same set of laws to follow because if they didn't we would be very divided as before the civil war. Now for the final house the executive branch, the executive branch which carries out and enforces laws, and that affect us every day because if we had no one to enforce laws then we would be in chaos. In conclusion, the constitution is very important, affects our daily life to this day, and gives us lots of freedom most around the world don't have it is too bad that the new generation doesn't see that or the fact that people wish to make it to the united states of America to have the freedoms we are born with and take advantage of every day. And they are trying to tear this country apart and I hope they see how great this country has become. I'm also very hopeful that my children and the children of many get to experience the greatness of this country and the freedom we have.
